John Donne's Physics

Elizabeth D. Harvey and Timothy M. Harrison

"John Donne's Physics is a remarkable book. In their engaging way, the authors resituate Donne's Devotions upon Emergent Occasions, his exploration of what they call 'the extended domain of dying,' at the center of his corpus, where philosophical, physical, medical, and other kinds of knowledge converge. I learned a great deal and will absorb Harvey and Harrison's insights into my own research and teaching."—Roland Greene, Stanford University

The Librarian's Atlas

The Shape of Knowledge in Early Modern Spain
Seth Kimmel

"The Librarian's Atlas is an early modern booklover's dream. It invites the reader to peer over the shoulder of the creative act of world-making that took place in early modern Spanish libraries. As Kimmel masterfully shows, these libraries were not passive book repositories but vibrant and intellectually stimulating sites of knowledge creation. Their contents and organization were also political projects essential to the formation of a modern understanding of the world."—María M. Portuondo, Johns Hopkins University

Shakespeare's Once and Future Child

Speculations on Sovereignty
Joseph Campana

"This is an ambitious and genuinely innovative book. Campana has assembled a dynamic cluster of themes around the infinitely mutable, malleable, and violable figure of the child in Shakespeare. Roving freely across the breadth of Shakespeare's works, Campana compellingly demonstrates how childhood came to figure the pressures and transformations of sovereignty, biopower, and mercantilism in the early modern period."

Botanical Icons

Critical Practices of Illustration in the Premodern Mediterranean

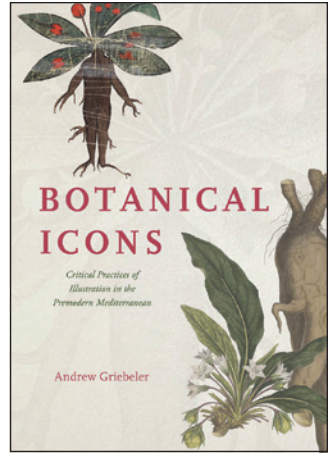

Andrew Griebeler

“Botanical Icons is a fascinating, thought-provoking, critical survey of plant illustration practices in the premodern Mediterranean. Griebeler takes his audience on a journey that forces one to reconsider conceptions (and misconceptions) of Mediterranean visual botanical knowledge that are at the root of the modern scientific depiction of plants. The rich, scholarly text, which provokes questions on every page, is supported and augmented by the use of many carefully selected comparative images from across Mediterranean cultures.”

Fixers

Agency, Translation, and the Early Global History of Literature

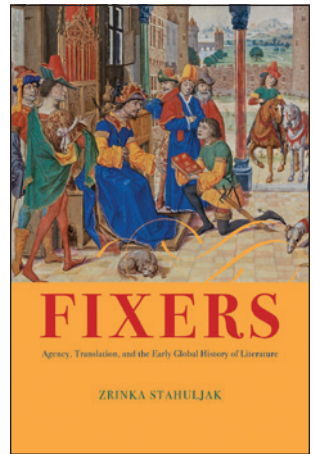

Zrinka Stahuljak

“In her paradigm-shifting Fixers, Stahuljak boldly rewrites the terms of literary history as we understand it, decentering its national authors and genres to refocus our gaze on a late medieval literature that comes into being by and through its ‘fixers’—worldly translators and emissaries, diplomats, and merchants—whose activities give shape to an early, precolonial world literature. A study that will do no less than force a rethinking of existing accounts of medieval literary production, Fixers is at the same time essential reading for scholars of world literature, translation, and decolonization.”

Glorious Bodies

Trans Theology and Renaissance Literature

Colby Gordon

In this striking contribution to trans history, Colby Gordon challenges the prevailing assumption that trans life is a byproduct of recent medical innovation by locating a cultural imaginary of transition in the religious writing of the English Renaissance. Marking a major intervention in early modern gender studies, Glorious Bodies insists that transition happened, both socially and surgically, hundreds of years before the nineteenth-century advent of sexology.

Waste and the Wasters

Poetry and Ecosystemic Thought in Medieval England
Eleanor Johnson

“Waste and the Wasters deftly maps the contours of ecosystemic imagination in medieval England through close engagement with one of its major vehicles: poetry. Johnson’s compelling study shows the importance of dealing with premodern sources in all their complexity as they work to make sense of the dense relational landscape that they inhabit and their responsibilities within it.”—Brooke Holmes, Princeton University

Eleanor of Aquitaine, as It Was Said

Truth and Tales about the Medieval Queen
Karen Sullivan

“A fascinating must-read for all enthusiasts of Eleanor of Aquitaine. Sullivan conducts a survey of Eleanor’s life via a detailed focus on the main historical controversies. The author does not ‘pick a side,’ but instead asks all of us to revisit our preconceptions of this most inspiring medieval queen. The book manages the neat trick of providing much food for thought while being a highly enjoyable read. I look forward to rereading it already!”

Textual Magic

Charms and Written Amulets in Medieval England
Katherine Storm Hindley

“A thought-provoking look at the distinctive ways medieval English people viewed language [that] intrigues. It’s an enlightening deep dive.”—Publishers Weekly

“Hindley paints a picture of magic’s place in medieval England, producing an eye-opening study of ‘words at their most powerful’ . . . that promise[s] to change the way we think about magic in the medieval world.”

Gifts in the Age of Empire

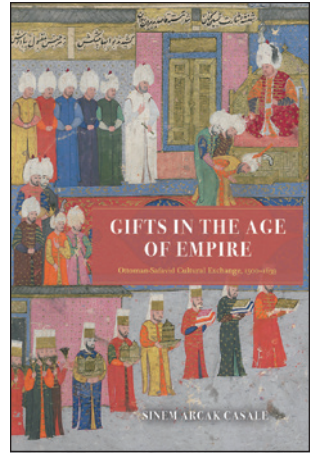

Ottoman-Safavid Cultural Exchange, 1500–1639
Sinem Arcaç Casale

“Until now, viewing early modern Ottoman and Safavid art and politics through the lens of gift giving was a relatively novel idea and one that had not previously been employed in a comprehensive manner. With Gifts in the Age of Empire, Casale repositions the study of gift exchange in a broader sphere, which has to do with the global movement of works of art and its impact on visual culture. This thoroughly researched, well-written, and profusely illustrated monograph is particularly relevant when considering later Islamic arts.”—Linda Komaroff, curator and department head, Los Angeles County Museum of Art

Fragments of a World

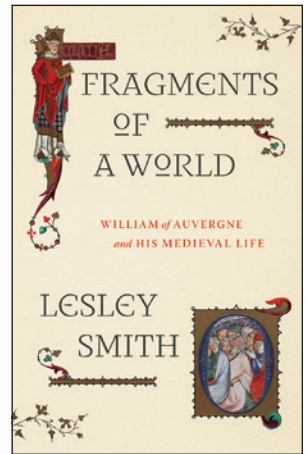

William of Auvergne and His Medieval Life
Lesley Smith

“In this thoughtful and accessible study, the thirteenth-century theologian and bishop of Paris William of Auvergne comes alive through an especially close reading of his sermons. Smith has a light touch that complements her thorough mastery of the details of William’s worldview and the context within which he taught and provided pastoral care. Fragments of a World is a stunning achievement, one of the finest biographies of a medieval figure that I know and a sheer pleasure to read.”

Voice Machines

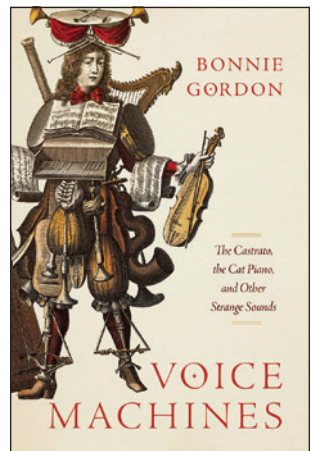

The Castrato, the Cat Piano, and Other Strange Sounds
Bonnie Gordon

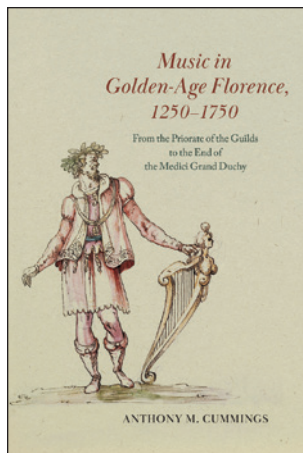

Bonnie Gordon

“A terrific book. The history of the machine, like the history of the human, is complex. And it is this complexity, that jostles for our attention on every page. An epistemological pickle, the castrato was also a figure who, perfected through surgery, enhanced sensory knowledge and extended physical nature by, for example, transubstantiating matters like air or breath into others, like voice. The sound of that voice becomes newly visceral and material in these pages.”—J. Q. Davies, author of Creatures of the Air: Music, Atlantic Spirits, Breath, 1817–1913

Music in Golden-Age Florence, 1250-1750

From the Priorate of the Guilds to the End of the Medici Grand Duchy

Anthony M. Cummings

“Cummings’s history of music in Florence over a five-hundred-year period is a work of brilliant synthesis, bringing together in one place a vast array of sources that few readers could otherwise hope to access. Specialists and nonspecialists alike will find this a highly readable narrative of this great city’s vibrant musical life during the medieval and early-modern periods.”—Blake Wilson, Dickinson College

The Varnish and the Glaze

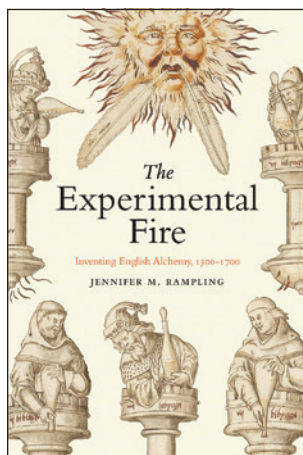

Painting Splendor with Oil, 1100-1500

Marjolijn Bol

“In this field-defining work of technical art history, Bol makes an original argument for a combined material, technical, and cultural revolution in the art of image making. With stunning illustrations and prose as lucid as the precious gems she examines, Bol demonstrates a fifteenth-century transformation in systems of depicting optical reflection and refraction across media—in goldsmithing, manuscript illumination, panel painting, and tapestry weaving—as art making shifted from mimesis of materials to include the whole of the visible world.”

The Experimental Fire

Inventing English Alchemy, 1300-1700

Jennifer M. Rampling

“Rampling offers a masterful survey of alchemy in England, from its status as the largest scientific genre circa 1400 through the patronage of Henry VIII and Elizabeth I. Building on the legacy of George Ripley, English alchemists developed expert skills in textual interpretation and experimental practice—focused on both medicine and transmutation—in order to portray themselves as philosophers rather than artisans. Rampling writes with admirable lucidity about cryptic manuscripts, colorful figures, and complicated archival evidence.”—Ann M. Blair, Harvard University

Knots, or the Violence of Desire in Renaissance Florence

Emanuele Lugli

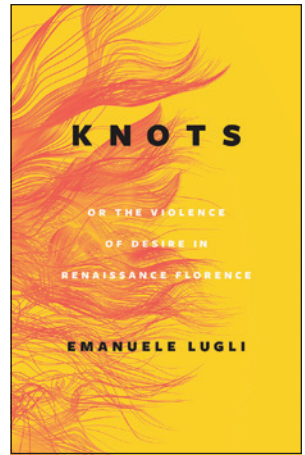

An interdisciplinary study of hair through the art, philosophy, and science of fifteenth-century Florence.

“In this lovely study of hair’s meanings in Renaissance culture, Lugli unveils ways in which people naturalize cultural values regarding age, race, class, gender, and sexuality. Beautifully illustrated, meticulously researched, and engagingly written, Knots will engage scholars, students, and lay readers alike.”

Encounters in the New World

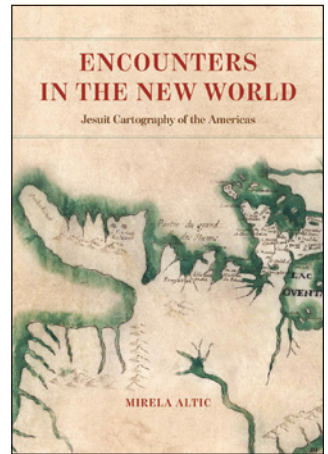

Jesuit Cartography of the Americas

Mirela Altic

“The first comprehensive study of Jesuit mapmaking in the Americas. This book tells the story of Jesuit cartography during the Age of Exploration—when Jesuit missionaries played a crucial role as conduits among cultures. Combining European mathematical techniques with the knowledge of the peoples they evangelized, Jesuits produced the first modern maps of many parts of Mexico, South America, the Great Lakes and Canada. . . . Altic brings a wealth of knowledge about cartography and explores the techniques as well as the motivations of its Jesuit authors.”—Michael T. Rizzi, America Magazine

Saint Cecilia in the Renaissance

The Emergence of a Musical Icon

John A. Rice

The Inner Sea

Maritime Literary Culture in Early Modern Portugal
Josiah Blackmore

“In our fruitful age of global studies and the West’s fascination with Africa and India, The Inner Sea could not be more timely. Blackmore offers readers a stunning account of Da Gama’s unprecedented voyages from Portugal to Africa in 1497, reaching India in 1498, and their profound meaning. These journeys for the first time transformed a world divided by the seas into an interconnected one, not only reaching South Africa, but India as well. The Inner Sea is richly documented by many sources that the author has chosen to accompany his dazzling readings of Camões’s extraordinary maritime epic adventure, Os Lusíadas.”—Marina S. Music in the Flesh

An Early Modern Musical Physiology
Bettina Varwig

“Varwig’s brilliant book brings to life—almost literally—the wonderfully vivid writing of early modern theorists on the entanglement of music with the ‘ensouled bodies’ of its listeners and makers. The result is a gripping account of an astonishing body of historical writing that has prescient connections with twenty-first-century thinking about music and the embodied mind, and which urges its readers to experience the music of that period in richly transformed ways.”—Eric F.
